

Spring Meeting at Pimlico.
BALTIMORE, May 23.—The annual spring meeting of the Maryland Jockey club over Pimlico course commences on Tuesday next, the 25th instant, and will continue four days. The track, improved by the rain of yesterday, was never in better condition for so safely and speed. Over 200 horses are reported in the stables at Pimlico, among which are included the most well-known racers and representing all the best noted stables of the country, including Belmont's, the LeVillards' Bowles'

MADEIRA, May 23.—Two thousand spinner participated in the wrecking and subsequent burning of the mill at Barcelona. Forty-three persons were arrested.

LONDON, May 24.—Mr. P. J. Smyth has withdrawn his resignation of his seat in parliament. He explains that his resolve to resign was taken hastily.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 23.—The Porte has settled the claims of the contractors for the war office by giving them assignments upon the tithe for the next year.

Mr. McGill, the defendant, positively declares that Mr. Tolman ever was his partner, but his position was only that of draughtsman at a salary graded to a certain proportion of the profits of Mr. McGill's business; that he has paid Tolman all that he guaranteed him, and all that is due him, and when the business of the year is fully settled he will be ready to pay any further sum, if any must become due him.

knowing that they loved once to their country. . . . Although the Grand Army of the Republic is an army of peace, it is nevertheless for war against the spirit of disunion—against wrong and injustice. I love to think, said he, of this army keeping alive the sacred fires of patriotism in the national heart. The electric cords of sympathy stretching through every city and hamlet in our vast domain shall carry swift the spark from heart to heart through all the host, and they shall glow as one heart. The grand army is one, though

Mr. Thomas A. Forbes, who was clerk to his brother-in-law, the late commander, W. H. Cushing, when that officer commanded the sloop-of-war Wyoming, died in Buffalo, N. Y., on the 19th instant. Tom Forbes, as he was familiarly known, was a son of General D. S. Forbes, of Fredonia, N. Y. His remains have been interred in the little cemetery of his native town beside those of his noble-hearted mother, whose death occurred in January, 1875, a month after that of Commander Cushing.
